

Let's get started!

I am writing this book because I want to help you (the reader) get to know other people. Do you wonder if your friends ever think about what type of animal they would be? What will happen when they die? Where do they like to shop? This book will give you many examples of questions to ask, with multiple choice answers, to help you the reader get to know the person being asked.

In the second chapter you will ask basic questions to the person in order to get to know them better. For example, what is your name? Where do you live? You know boring stuff that you need to know about the person. In Chapter three you will be asking questions to find out what the person is really like! These in depth questions will bring you a clearer picture of what the person being asked is thinking about. Chapter four is a series of pictures you can show a person to ask what they see. Some people may see more than what first catches the eye. Chapter five is a list of characteristics a person should have or not have to be a true friend.

It should be noted that these questions can also help prepare the person being asked for the following: Secondary school interview, job interviews, university interviews, audit interviews, lie detector tests, celebrity interviews and also CIA interviews. So pursuing these questions with friends, acquaintances and strangers will be beneficial to both you and the person being asked.

Let's start asking questions!!!!
